MOOD-01 | Therapist only - all age groups

Looking at the day and what affects it

1 | Purpose, fit and boundaries

What this sheet is for

Choose an everyday moment together and describe the context, action or difficulty acting, feelings and support needs. The aim is shared understanding; a change in mood is not required to complete the sheet.

This is proposed original material for review, not a diagnostic questionnaire, depression measure or validated treatment protocol. There is no total score, medical cutoff or required completion frequency.

Before choosing the form

Choose this only after professional assessment and with consent, according to the person's ability, preferences and context. Difficulty acting may reflect overload, physical limitations, lack of resources or an unsafe environment; do not automatically interpret it as avoidance.

Physical difficulties, a harmful context or a significant change in condition may require a different assessment or response. If an urgent need or safety concern arises, stop the exercise and follow the professional assessment and procedures appropriate to the setting.

How it fits with existing material

Use SES-S01 to open the session and SES-S02 to close it. ASM provides broader mapping; do not repeat it here. CORE-02 maps thoughts, feelings and responses; MOOD-01 focuses on activity, feelings and support.

CORE-05 is for action planning. Do not turn this observation into an activity requirement or duplicate an action plan. The guide is for the therapist; W and P are chosen and adapted separately.

> Final clinical review and rights approval have not been completed. This package is for administrator review only.

A conversation about one moment

2 | Guiding worksheet W

Choice and agreement

Ask: "Which moment would you like to look at today?" The person may choose a neutral or pleasant moment, skip a section, answer aloud or choose another tool. Preserve their words and distinguish their account from the therapist's interpretation.

Context and action

Explore what was happening and what was done, postponed or not possible. You might ask: "What matters to you for us to understand about this moment?" Then: "What was not possible, and what did you need?" Do not assume another practical option existed.

Feelings, needs and support

Ask about feelings before and after only when appropriate and accessible. "I don't know," "I don't remember" and "Nothing changed" are valid answers. Explore what made things harder, what helped and whether the support was wanted. No numerical rating is needed.

Learning without a predetermined conclusion

A single observation does not prove cause and effect. Explore together what remains unknown, without assigning blame or treating a lack of improvement as failure. Stopping or choosing not to complete a form may offer information about suitability and burden.

An agreed ending

Summarize one question to continue in the person's own words. You might ask: "Would you like to notice another moment, or would something else suit you now?" Sheet P does not have to be handed in. Keep treatment information only in the authorized setting, outside the code repository.

Four age adaptations

3 | Choosing by development, ability and preference

CH | Children, approximately ages 6 to 11

Use a concrete moment and one question at a time. Help with reading or writing without replacing the child's voice. A single word or conversation is enough. Agree parent involvement within the professional setting and according to the child's needs; do not require parents to supervise completion.

TE | Adolescents, approximately ages 12 to 17

Leave choices about the topic, amount of writing and what is brought to the session. Explain privacy limits and when the setting requires information to be shared; do not promise absolute confidentiality. Avoid assumptions about education, family or relationships.

AD | Adults

Consider workload, roles, commitments and actual resources. The activity described may be rest or asking for help. Check that practice fits the person's energy and routine, without assuming availability or control over circumstances.

OA | Older adults

Offer spacious text, time and conversation according to preference. Accessibility aids or a person chosen by the participant may help, while preserving privacy. Do not infer difficulty, dependence or reduced ability from age alone.

> Chronological age is only a starting point. Each version requires a separate suitability review. Do not automatically apply adult treatment recommendations to children or adolescents.

Practice, review and next steps

4 | Possible use of sheet P and content review

Choosing a brief observation

If appropriate, choose one possible opportunity, a comfortable way to record it and any wanted support. The aim is to notice, not to maintain a daily streak. If it was not possible, explore the conditions and change the suggestion; do not label success or failure.

At the next session

Return to what actually happened and the person's question. Explore what helped, what was burdensome and what should remain open. Only as professionally appropriate, use CORE-05 for action planning, CORE-06 for problem solving or CORE-08 for review. Close with SES-S02.

Review documentation

Each version has a separate review record: originality, age suitability, fictional completion, reviewer, date, findings and approval of corrections. These are not treatment records. Uncompleted reviewer and date fields remain blank; technical approval is not clinical approval or permission to distribute.

References and limits of their use

NICE NG222, section 1.5.2 and the options table: background on shared choice and the relationship between activity and mood in adults. NICE NG134, sections 1.5.4-1.5.5: background on individual adaptation based on assessment, development, context and preferences.

The references do not validate MOOD-01 and are not used to copy a questionnaire. No number of sessions or treatment pathway is specified here. The wording is a new draft based on the specification merged in PR #9.
